The exhibition program at the Solomon R. Guggenheim Museum draws upon two source categories: loans from other museums, collectors, artists and galleries on the one hand, and holdings of the Museum Collection on the other. The current exhibition entitled MODERN MASTERS falls within the latter group.

The Guggenheim Museum collection of painting, sculpture and graphic art is much too extensive to be shown in its entirety. Consequently, our selections, presented from time to time, emphasize one particular aspect or are formed around a central idea that calls for the inclusion of specific works of art.

The INAUGURAL SELECTION which was on view when the new Frank Lloyd Wright building opened in 1959 was of an introductory character and ranged freely across the entire Collection. ACQUISITIONS: 1953-1961, presented here last spring, limited itself to post-war painting and specifically to many of the significant purchases made during the directorship of James Johnson Sweeney. In the MODERN MASTERS choice, the emphasis shifts to the classics of the modern movement, acquired largely during the lifetime of the Founder and during the administration of the Museum's first Director, the Baroness Hilla Rebay.

The purpose of this exhibition, further, is to stress areas of concentration and to show a few artists in depth. Brancusi, Picasso, Léger, Gleizes, Delaunay, Mondrian, Chagall, Modigliani, Mare, Feininger and Seurat are therefore represented by not fewer than five works each, while in the instances of Klee and Gleizes, as many as thirteen works are used to illustrate the strong representation of each of these masters in the Museum's Collection.

In this connection, it should be pointed out that the Kandinsky group — separately installed and not carried in this checklist — is in keeping with the concept determining the MODERN MASTERS exhibition and that the 22 works on view may be regarded as part of it.
